

Vincent Evans, Executive Director, Congressional Black Caucus

Vincent Evans serves as Executive Director of the Congressional Black Caucus, since January 2022.

In this role, Evans oversees the legislative policy agenda, manages the external and political affairs of the Caucus, and manages a staff in support of the CBC. The CBC, first established in 1971, is the largest in its history with 60 Black members of Congress from diverse districts across the country.

Prior to this role, Evans served as the Deputy Director of the Office of Public Engagement and Intergovernmental Affairs for Vice President Kamala Harris at the White House where he was responsible for creating and coordinating direct dialogue between the Biden-Harris administration and the diverse American public. He worked at the local, state, and national levels to ensure community leaders, diverse perspectives, and new voices all had the opportunity to inform the work of the President.

Previously, Evans served as Political Director to the Vice President on the Biden-Harris Campaign during the general election and the campaign's Southern Political Director during the primary season. Prior to this, he served on the senior staff of U.S. Representative Al Lawson of Florida, with a portfolio that focused on state and local issues. Before his role in the Congress, Evans worked as the Aide to Tallahassee City Commissioner Curtis Richardson, after running his successful campaign.

His experience includes stints working at a government relations firm focused on state legislative matters, in the Florida Senate Democratic Caucus for Democratic Leader Nan Rich and later at a cabinet-level state agency. He managed or served in leadership roles on the campaigns of the two most recent Florida Democratic gubernatorial nominees and several local, state, and congressional races in Florida.

In 2022, Evans was named a "Young Black Changemaker" by NextGen America, nation's largest youth voter organization, mobilizing millions of young people each year to support progressive candidates up and down the ballot.

Born and raised in Florida, Evans attended Florida A&M University, the nation's highest ranked public HBCU.
