

For nearly two decades, Christal M. Jackson has had a fulfilling career serving in the social impact sector.

She is the founder of Head and Heart Philanthropy (HHP), the parent company to Mosaic Genius, a social impact agency focused on improving social, economic and educational outcomes for communities of color. Christal attributes her success to having been groomed for leadership by the church – from serving as an intern with the Children's Defense Fund to creating a marketplace for multi-million dollar initiatives focused on solving complicated social issues.

Nearly two decades ago, she became an entrepreneur by launching a boutique fund development and branding firm focused on serving the philanthropic needs of socially conscious individuals and community organizations. This venture was the launching pad to her working with some of the biggest names in sports, politics and entertainment.

Christal is one of EBONY magazine's Future 30 Leaders of America. Her work in the social impact sector has garnered numerous awards and recognition. She serves on a few boards including The New Community Transformation Fund, WOCStar Fund and serves as the first female board chair of color of the Africa America Institute.

Christal holds a dual degree in Psychology and Religion from Spelman and a Masters of Theological Studies from Duke University.
