

Sally O. Nnamani

Sally O. Nnamani is a Nigerian American social intrapreneur working at the nexus of sport, social entrepreneurship, peacebuilding and youth development. She is the United States Co-Executive Director at PeacePlayers International, an award-winning global organization with a mission to use the power of sport to bridge divides and develop youth leaders in some of the most divided and disinvested communities in the US and globally. From Durban, South Africa to Jerusalem to the southside of Chicago to Southwest Detroit and many other locations, PeacePlayers runs year-round basketball, conflict resolution and youth leadership programs that has reached over 150,000 youth since inception. PeacePlayers programs are centered on creating meaningful opportunities for youth to build relationships across divides and be active participants in global issues affecting their local communities.

Sally began her career at the joint office of the International Chamber of Commerce and the United Nations supporting private sector advocacy in the SDGs creation process. Shortly after, she joined PeacePlayers as a International Fellow in Belfast, Northern Ireland leading sport and peacebuilding programs in a society that is deeply affected by the legacy of sectarian conflict. Sally is a thought leader in the sport for development and peace space. She regularly shares her expertise at guest lectures and conferences. Sally is an Aspen IDEAS Fellow, AIF Fellow at the Center for Strategic & International Studies, and a Term Member at the Council on Foreign Relations.
